The Journal of Media Law provides scholarly and critical analysis of media law developments. Each issue consists of four to five articles, a comment and analysis section and book reviews.

It publishes refereed articles on all aspects of media law and regulation, including their application to the new electronic media, and contains shorter notes on recent cases and other major developments in the UK, Europe, USA, the Commonwealth and other jurisdictions. It turns the spotlight on all those aspects of law which impinge on and shape modern media practices - from ownership, to libel law and constitutional aspects of broadcasting such as free speech and privacy, obscenity laws, copyright, piracy, and other aspects of IT law. The result is the first journal to offer a detailed view of media law.
